Behind a DHEC industrial probe...

(Editor's note: The following story is the second in a series on the Department of Health and Environmental Control, (DHEC) and the second part of a story dealing with South Carolina workers exposed to toxic substances in their work environment. Future stories, to be published over the next several months, will examine other aspects of the

This week's story is concerned with two related events; a medical survey conducted by DHEC last February on workers exposed to the suspected caricinogen poly-chlorinated biphenyl, and a similar but more grandiose study of PCB - exposed workers which will be conducted privately by the Sangamp Electric Company in January. DHFC's involvement and performance in relation to each of these events raises questions about the agency's total commitment to indusurial and community health. There are no villians in this piece -- only bureaucrats.)

By John Norton

On Feb. 9 and 10, 1976, Dr. A. B. Smith of DHEC's division of epidemiology conducted a medical survey at the McGraw-Edison power capacitor division in Greenwood. At that time, the company used the suspected carcinogen poly-chlorinated biphenyl in its manufacturing process, and McGraw-Edison management had agreed to allow employes to participate in the survey, which involved the compilation of medical histories and the taking of blood samples for analysis.

Greenwood's McGraw-Edison power capacitor plant has been in operation since June, 1973. The company manufactures high-voltage capacitors which are used by electric utilities. Until recently, McGraw-Edison, like other companies in the capacitor business, has used poly-chlorinated biphenyls as an insulating fluid in their products. PCBs have chemical properties which make them excellent insulators and electrical equipment industries have used them for this purpose for more than 40 years. About eight years ago, researchers reported that PCBs had been linked to a number of physical ailments and disorders. More recent research, published within the last two years, has indicated that PCBs are probably cancer-inducing agents which are non-biodegradable and which accumulate in human blood, fatty tissue, and in the liver and pancreas. (See Osceola, Oct. 15) By the time these discoveries were made, PCBs were everywhere in the environment; the chemical properties which made them so attractive to the electrical industry had applications in a wide variety of other products, including printers' inks, adhesives, paint additives, sealants, -- in fact, in just about every product where heat resistance was a factor. By the early 1970s PCB

Quote of the Week

"I'm too young to vegetate."

--President Ford discussing his future in a recent interview

Or how about Totie Fields?

Speaking of vegetating, Strom Thurmond made headlines the other day by offering to departing President Gerald Ford to "put his name in the pot" for the upcoming presidential vacancy at the University of South Carolina, if the lame-duck President is interested in part-time employment.

Jerry politely turned down Strom's invite, telling South Carolina's model-T senator that he wanted to be free to "do things he had in mind," as Strom put it. "He did not want to be tied down to any particular place."

Thurmond told straight-faced reporters in Washington that he made his suggestion to Ford in a telephone conversation he had with the President just after the election. He would recommend Jer to the Board of Trustees, if Ford wanted him to. It was quite a step for Old Strom, who had most recently indicated his disdain for Jerry as President of the good ole U. S. of A. by supporting Ronnie Reagan over Ford back during the Republican skirmish for the nomination.

But now that Ford has turned us down, maybe Strom will have some other suggestions for the job. Applicants must have earned a high school degree, we understand. How about Reagan? Or Jim Edwards? Frank Blair? Maybe Chuck Colson? Or how about this: nobody for president! Now there's an idea that has some merit, considering the job we're talking about. Couldn't be any worse than now if you consider that the legislature runs the University anyway. This would make it official, and save us all $40,000.

Winning through intimidation

We don't know if S. C. businessmen and politicos have been reading Robert J. Ringer's "Winning Through Intimidation" lately, but it sure looks like that's what they're trying to do with the daily press.

A few weeks ago Osceola told of how former Senator James Stevens (in the Nov. 5 edition) and Sixth District Representative John Jenrette (Oct. 22) have engaged in lawsuits against papers that were investigating them. Well, several other items have turned up that suggest this rash of suits is turning into an epidemic.

For example: the Myrtle Beach Sun-Times, the paper sued by Stevens, has again been taken into court by Stevens, this time in his capacity as a private lawyer. Stevens is representing a Myrtle Beach real estate owner and motel operator named Jack Jones, who is suing because of a UPI wire story the Sun-News ran that told of Jones' indictment in California on charges of bank fraud. The story also contained some suggestive remarks about Jones' motives by the DA in the case, and Jones is alleging that as a result "he has been held up to public scorn and contempt, he has suffered mental anxiety and embarrassment, loss of credit and loss of business." Jones wants the Sun-News, and its parent company, the Columbia State-Record, to fork over $1 million.

--From "The Monitor"

A short drive up the coast in North Myrtle Beach, Stevens is representing yet another suit against the media. Phil Permenter, local land developer, is suing radio station WNBM for certain statements made by announcer Dick Biondi on that station's morning talk program. Biondi, it seems, accused Permenter of lining his pockets in a pending deal in which part of Permenter's Cherry Grove development was to be sold to the Town of North Myrtle Beach as a public boat ramp. Biondi claimed that he was merely relaying reports given to him by his listeners, but Permenter held that the announcer's words were "false, malicious, slanderous, and defamtory" and a variety of city officials, incensed over the resultant collapse of the boat dock deal, backed him up. Permenter's upping the ante to $3 million.

We've also heard reports of still another suit handled by Stevens -- this one against the Charleston News and Courier -- but it's seemingly so hush hush that neither the News and Courier staff, their lawyers, nor Stevens' office would give us any information on what it concerned.

So has all this litigation had any intimidating effect on press performance? A difficult question to answer, but a recent story in the USC journalism school Monitor sheds some light on the possible consequences. The Monitor tells of how a Lee Bandy story on John Jenrette was shelved by The State not long after the October, 1975 Jenrette suit against that paper.

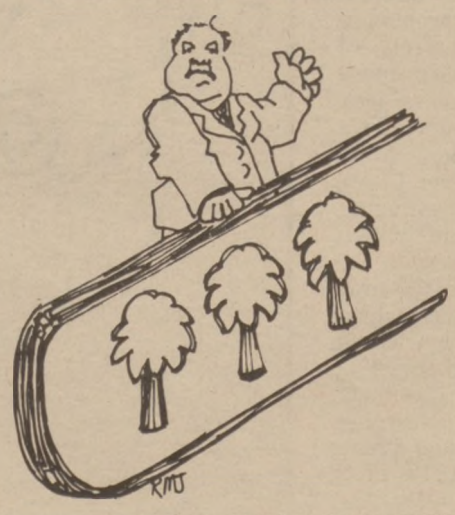
The story, which concerned the Heritage Shores scandal later uncovered by the Charlotte Observer, apparently went directly to managing editor Bob Pierce and was axed by Pierce, the State's lawyers, and other higher ups. When the Monitor questioned Pierce about what happened, he replied, "I don't know if I should tell you anything about it...because of the current litigation. When they asked what was in the story that was so controversial he maintained, "I don't really remember what was in the story" and refused to furnish copies. Bandy suggested the story was killed because it lacked detailed background information, but when the Monitor asked Pierce why other reporters weren't dispatched to follow up Bandy's leads, he would give no answer. Intimidation? Who, him?

Most likely all of the above mentioned suits will eventually go before the S. C. Supreme Court, which has stated in previous decisions that wilful malice must be proven on the part of the newspaper being sued. But nuisance suits have traditionally been used by public figures to silence a critical press, and sometimes succeed where the newspapers are too weak or timid to fight back. The question is whether Stevens and his bevy of litigants will succeed in getting S. C. 's dailies to roll over and play dead.

Going up?

Anyone who says members of the General Assembly don't have enough sense to come in out of the rain obviously hasn't looked at the proposals before the upcoming legislative session. Included in the bonding for the State Capitol Complex rising on Pendleton Street is an amendment that would supply $315,000 for an escalator between the existing underground parking garage and the interior of the State House. It seems that while employes of the other state office buildings get an elevator ride from the garage directly to their offices, the 107 workers in the State House proper have to either crowd onto a tiny hydraulic elevator in the building or leave the garage by means of several outside exit wells that dot the capitol grounds: in other words, if it's raining, they get wet.

It's obviously an intolerable situation — our representatives getting colds and chillblains — but $315,000? For an escalator? When we questioned Division of General Services Head Furman McEachern about the figure, he replied, "No one ever indicated to me that it was a big price for escalators." He said that half this cost about $150,000, was necessary for extensive structural changes to the south side of the 19th Century State House — replacing the brick step supports with steel, burrowing through the foundation wall. The other half would go to the escalator machinery itself. Apparently escalators are very expensive indeed since two elevators to serve the same function would only run $75,000, but McEachern emphasized that there was no room for the elevators and no place to put the necessary hoisting machinery.



Of course the state could save itself a bundle by putting in steps rather than either escalator or elevator; however, that would defeat the whole purpose of the proposal, which is convenience. And why complain about a measly 300 thou anyway when the cost of state government is skyrocketing, pushing a billion dollars? This latest measure, which is already in the planning stage and merely awaiting funding, would just make the most exclusive gentleman's club in South Carolina a little more exclusive.

The semantics of the 'pardon'

A word of warning to anyone related to or friends of Vietnam War resisters contemplating a clandestine trip home this Christmas. Don't encourage it. In fact, don't allow it.

One South Carolina family we know recently queried the American Civil Liberties Union about reports that the Department of Justice is now discouraging the prosecution of Vietnam and Selective Service related cases. ACLU issued the following memo:

"Several categories of Vietnam War resisters continue to be in jeopardy of arrest and prosecution. Among them are: draft violators who have a criminal indictment pending against them; military deserters, who may be forcibly returned to their military branch for disposition; unindicted non-registrants whose violation of the draft-registration requirement only now comes to the attention of law-enforcement agencies; and those draft violators who enrolled in the Clemency Program, failed to perform their Reconciliation Service, and are therefore liable to having their indictment revived.

"Contrary to recent news reports, the Department of Justice has not (repeat: not) enunciated a policy of assuring such war resisters that, between now and Jan. 20, 1977, they are immune from arrest and prosecution. Any such person who is abroad is liable to arrest at the border crossing point and may be sent to the district where his criminal prosecution is pending or to the military branch having jurisdiction.

"President-elect Jimmy Carter's staff is now working on the formulation of a general pardon for draft resisters. It is to be expected that only draft violators will be covered, not military deserters. It is not known whether other problems will be covered, such as the exclusion from the country of war resisters who have become naturalized in another country and are presumed to have lost their American citizenship.

"There are reports that U. S. Attorneys, in various degrees, are informally proposing not to institute new Selective Service prosecutions until the extent of the projected Carter pardon is known. There is no general rule about that; however, you should advise anyone who inquires that no immunity from arrest and prosecution has been given to war resisters and that they will be taking a real risk of arrest at the border if they try to enter before the Carter pardon proclamation has been issued."

Further apprehension has been raised concerning Carter's "pardon" proposals since he turned the formulating of policy over to conservative confidante Charles Kirbo. If Carter chooses to pardon only draft resisters per se, the program will cover only a handful of the total number of exiles.

For instance, the ACLU has warned families of those draft evaders who became Canadian citizens that a section of the U. S. Nationality and Immigration law holds that persons who left the U. S. to avoid military service cannot be admitted to this country for any purpose. Carter's proposed pardon would not, in all likelihood, do a thing to help these people. Deserters, those who never registered for the draft, and participants in President Ford's clemency program who failed to perform their assigned "service" will also remain in limbo if Carter-Kirbo opt for a "narrow" pardon.

Families and friends of those who left the country or the army during this country's Vietnam adventure are urged to write Carter (Box 1976, Atlanta, Ga.) to encourage a "broad" pardon. Only such an action by the new President will enhance the chances of putting fully behind us the Vietnam decade. In a country where William Calley, Sprio Agnew and Richard Nixon are free to walk the streets, it seems the least that Carter can do.

Better late than never department

Missouri Senator Stuart Symington, the old warhorse who angrily resigned as Secretary of the Air Force because of Congress-imposed cuts in the 1950 Defense budget, called it quits as a Senator the other day after 30 years around Washington.

And he sounded quite a different tune in his swan song than the one he generally blew long and hard as an advocate of massive military spending during the "missle gap" 50's and "bomb shelter" 60's.

Symington, 74, believes now that nuclear war is "not only possible, but probable" by the end of the century — and the prospect downright scares him. "What we are talking about is annihilation unless somebody can prevent it," said Symington. "The only possibility of changing the trend is publicity to all the people of the world."

Symington believes that the military complex he once championed has consistently over-stated its case for weaponry since the end of World War II, and that ever-increasing military expenditures and doomsday armament has the country armed to the teeth — and nearly bankrupt. He cited the cost of fighter planes that sold for $5,000 each in World War I, $50,000 in World War II, and the new F-14, which costs a cool $20 million. Not that anyone really needs all that many fighter planes, what with the U. S. and the USSR each packing 2,400 missles each, most with multiple - warhead capabilities. Those babies will knock your socks off.

Essentially, Symington said the arms race from this point is overkill, and that much of what he advocated over the last 30 years was, in a word, inoperative.

With Jimmy Carter and Congress set to debate the multi-billion dollar proposals on the B-1 Bomber early next year, one hopes that Symington's candid, if belated, confessions might be shoe-horned into "the record" at some point in those august proceedings.

Either that, or restock your supply of Spam in that bomb shelter in the basement, and ready yourself for the big one, Pentagon-style.

Correction

In last week's story, "The Senate Takes A Dive," there was a typographical error which probably confused things considerably. Arnold Goodstein was listed as moving from 46th (last) to 2nd on the list of Senate seniority. Of course, that's impossible, and the figure should have been 32nd, since Goodstein moved ahead of all 14 freshmen Senators. Aren't typos fun? We love the little boogers. Sorry.

he thought the study worth repeating, he added that even if the high blood levels were confirmed or more were found, "what do you tell the worker if you can't really interpret the results? How are you going to allay his fears?" But the health expert who found the one ppm figure "shocking," (and who prefers to remain unidentified) strongly disagreed. He described DHEC's handling of the affair as "benign neglect." "The individual involved has an absolute right to know the results of the tests," he said. "DHEC does not have the right to decide whether or not an individual should be told that he has a potential health problem."

Another expert source agreed, stating that while it is true that the full effects of PCB on human health are not yet known and no "black or white answers" can be given to industrial workers with suspicious blood levels about possible chronic effects of the suspected carcinogen, "at least the man will be on guard. If the state or the company won't monitor him for the next 20 years, at least he has the option to pay for regular checkups himself. Personally I think the state should warn all workers who come into regular contact with potentially dangerous chemicals that they should have regular examinations and be on the lookout for problems. Industrial workers deserve to be treated like adults. They shouldn't be alarmed, but they should be informed." Robinson's explanation that the McGraw-Edison study was dropped by DHEC last spring in favor of a study at Sangamo doesn't quite jive with Smith's account of Sangamo's refusal to become involved in such a study. However, Sangamo is now involved in a medical survey of workers, prompted apparently by all the adverse publicity aroused (and the law suit invoked) since August.

On Aug. 27, the Greenville News reported that "in one of the most extensive studies ever conducted on PCB effects on humans, state and federal occupational health officials will examine Sangamo exployes next month. Workers at the Sangamo plant will undergo a thorough medical analysis to determine if a connection exists between constant exposure to PCBs and cancer or other diseases. Dr. Donald Robinson...will direct the research team." Plans called for DHEC and the National Institute for Safety and Occupational Health (NIOSH) to send a team of medical investigators into the plant. Greenville News reporter Tom Priddy told Osceola that the week after this announcement was made, Robinson told him the study was being expanded to include Sangamo workers, former Sangamo workers, and members of the general population who lived in the vicinity of the plant. Robinson told Priddy volunteers for a study outside the plant would be easy to come by -- "He said people had already been making requests for examination," Priddy said.

The study was not conducted in September as announced. However, a meeting was held between Robinson, Sangamo officials, and the NIOSH representative, Dr. A. B. Smith, who had left DHEC over the summer to join the federal agency, which was created under the Occupational Safety and Health Act of 1970 to research and evaluate related to occupational health and safety. Smith says an agreement was reached that NIOSH, under DHEC auspices, would carry out the study in December. Plans were made, he said, for a NOISH team to visit

Theatre

A creative gesture

The USC theatre production of "Hedda Gabler" wasn't great or electrifying, but it was a good performance of a great play and as such was exceptional for Drayton Hall. Indeed, that this theatre organization that specializes in the accessible should do such an inaccessible work at all is a little bit fantastic. "Hedda" is a puzzle play, an enigma, that probably no one can explain in bald, analytical statements and that might very well leave audiences baffled. In its setting and plot structure (mid-19th Century Norway; Hedda, newly married to the academic George Tesman, is bored and frustrated) the play suggests "A Doll's House," that is, an examination of the social traps that women particularly are prey to in our society. But this time around Ibsen was going for more than just a socio-political tract; Hedda, beautiful and admired yet remote and sarcastic, is astonishingly complex -- surely one of the most complicated heroines in all of drama. Unlike Nora in "A Doll's House," who finally slammed the door on her problem, there seem to be no solutions in this character's future; it's not just her social situation, but life itself that she finds "ridiculous." The time-worn female compensations -- romantic love and motherhood -- don't phase her, and she's too much of a coward to violate respectability and break out of her surroundings. In her cerebral affair with the dissolute Ira Lovborg, she seeks the "one beautiful gesture" that will redeem life's sordidness (Hedda wants life to be not just beautiful but aesthetic), and when she fails to get it she kills herself. As Hedda says with more than casual foreshadowing, "If I have one talent it's for eventually boring myself to death!"

Is Hedda a stuck-up bitch or a tragic heroine with no means of expressing her intelligence and creative instincts except through destruction? A problem, and not one on which director James Patterson has overmany insights, but he guides his cast to a good, competent job of getting Ibsen's ideas across. John Marion's Tesman struck the right balance between Tesman's irritatingly fusty gestures -- fingering his lapels, wringing his hands, flipping up the eyebrows, the incessant "Hmm?" -- and the fact that Tesman is really not a bad sort -- just dull. Ruth A. Schultz got through all of Aunt Julia's exposition with only a moderate degree of stiltedness. Heavyset Hal Brooks was suitably slimey as Judge Brack, the man who drives Hedda over the brink, and Keith Gaylord, with his beetling brows and melodramatic delivery, was well cast as Lovborg.

And Patterson found an excellent Hedda in student-actress Kathleen Estes. Estes carried the role not so much with her readings, which were in a somewhat overly cultured voice, as with her expressions and stance. She looked perfect: cool and aloof and straight as an arrow with a kind of porcelain beauty, sometimes arching her brows in an incredulous riposte, sometimes literally looking down her nose at her ridiculous husband. Estes doesn't bring much emotional turmoil to the characterization, but that's alright: she maintains Hedda's sphinx-like quality of enigma while Ibsen's words and actions speak the character.

It was a handsomely mounted production with good period costumes by Lyn Carroll and furniture and various other items supplied via local antique shops. Nancy Myers McCauley's scenery provided an opportunity for Patterson's (or somebody's?) Big Symbol: rather than cover the flats with cloth or paper they're made out of a transparent scrim. I'm a little vague as to why we were thus bestowed with such distracting X-ray vision, but apparently it's some sort of comment on Ibsen's stripping away of the polite facade of this social milieu. Pretty heavy, huh?

"Hedda Gabler" has now been chosen as the USC entry into the American College Theatre Festival rather than the semi-disastrous "Page One." It's not likely to make the Department of Theatre and Speech's reputation as being in the forefront of radical drama, but it's a good, respectable performance. Just producing "Hedda Gabler" at all is probably the most creative thing this organization has done in a long time.

Music

Opera without theatre

Diva Beverly Sills made her return to Columbia Dec. 9, and if the performance was not altogether triumphant, the capacity audience expressed its enthusiasm in the warmest possible way.

It's hard to say whether it was the abominable Township acoustics or the vocal decline that some critics have noted in the past couple of years, but in the first half of the concert particularly, the timbre of Sills' singing seemed positively ragged. This portion of the program consisted of a vigorous aria from Handel's "Julius Caesar," a set of Schubert songs, and a piece from Donizetti's "Linda di Chamounix." Sills was -- of course -- impressive with the laryngeal acrobatics of the coloratura Donizetti, her specialty, but in the forceful, declamatory Handel and less so in the three Schubert lieder there was an audible strain. Sills has always had a less than perfect voice, I think, and in opera without theatre (she is reportedly a marvelous actress) or exercises in pure singing, she lacks the vocal character of a Price or the purity of a Sutherland that would make her singing truly impressive.

But these faults were largely redeemed in the second half of the evening, which was excellent. The expressive, atmospheric music of Faure seems ideally suited to Sills' gifts, and after the intermission she began with two more-or-less programmatic Faure reflections on love, "Poeme d'un jour" and "Notre Amour." This set was followed by two Granados works, the short, light "El tra la la y el punteado" and my favorite of the evening, the lovely "Elegia Eterna." The audience was especially appreciative of Chapi's wry "Carceleras" from "Las Hijas del Zebedo" and Sills finished out the scheduled program with a sure crowd-pleaser, "Una voce poca fa" from "The Barber of Seville."

Just before her final encore, a charming little love song that she said her music teacher gave her at age 10, Sills stated her pleasure at being back in Columbia, one of her favorite places. The feeling was obviously mutual among the audience which rose to a standing ovation. In the end Sills' charm overwhelmed any other flaws the concert may have had.

Books

Blind Ambition: The White House Years
by John W. Dean, III. Simon & Schuster, 415 pp., $11.95.

"Residual sewer gas from the Watergate explosion has leaked to the surface. John Dean has written a book the aims of which are first to make money and second to disprove Joseph Alsop's contention that its author is a 'bottom-dwelling slug.' The book may make money."

Nicholas von Hoffman
The New York Review

--From "The N. Y. Review"

"... —I kissed a lot of ass,' Dean tells a jailmate who asked how he got to so high a position at so early an age, and the book leaves little doubt that he did ..."

There was little surprise when the news finally came back in August of '74 that Richard M. Nixon, the scourge of the 20th century, would make history by becoming the first President to resign his office. The citizenry had been well-primed long before his actual disappearance from the White House. But it had also been subjected, beginning just after his election in '72, to more than 22 months of exposure to the seamy side of Richard Nixon before he was finally banished back to San Clemente to live in luxury (at our expense) and pardondom forever.

Since that time the citizenry has been exposed to a new plague: to wit, a rash of books by participant conspirators of the Watergate era, big and small. White collar crooks and former backroom, trenchcoat (and for all we know, present) employees of the government cashing in big on wrongdoing. The trash that has been published by members of the Nixon gang is for the most part not worth the paper it is printed on. Witness Chuck "I Found it" Colson's Born Again or Jeb "Crybaby" Magruder's An American Life. And if this group of third rate crooks telling the rest of us their version of the truth is not enough, we've got the likes of former domestic advisor to Nixon ("one of the finest public servants I have known") John Ehrlichman and former Vice-President Spiro Agnew (who was out making his own bit of crooked history) writing fiction. Pray for us, Chuck!

And then there is John Dean and Blind Ambition. Much was expected of this book since no one was closer to Nixon during the time that the Watergate follies unraveled (who would later turn his back on the President) than Dean. He was no more than what Watergate counsel Sam Dash calls a "Haldeman - Erhlichman messenger boy" when Watergate first became a thorn in Nixon's side; but, by his account, in time the whole White House came to depend more and more on the services of John Dean. And Dean willingly accepted the challenge as he moved further and further into the inner recesses of Nixon's crumbling castle.

Dean was no knight in shining armor, by any stretch of the imagination, but it was Dean who stood against the empire in the end. One man against the lies and continuing deceit of the Nixon administration. And when the final shot sounded it was Dean who still stood. All the giants had fallen. What he had told to officials and millions of Americans held up under fire. That is one reason faith was placed in his book.

Another was the fact that while a score of other Watergaters were turning out quick-money copy, we were given to believe that Dean was trying hard to assemble the best book the period would offer. Dean's excellent memory and the sincere image he portrayed throughout were only further proof. Most important, however, was the fact that Dean was the most likely among the inner circle to tell the truth, the whole truth. Little hope has been lodged in the memoirs of Nixon, slated to be more self-serving than LBJ's Vantage Point. What is to be expected of the man who went to his political grave to avoid telling the truth?

But if you expected much from Dean's book, you're probably in for a disappointment. Though the book is further proof of his excellent memory, it's so self-serving that at times it's too much to believe -- or, perhaps, endure. It's not that the book isn't interesting, although much of it is simply a rehash of prior public testimony mixed with the color surrounding it.

The problem is that Dean's objectivity is somewhere lost in his transition from defendant to author. His sense of guilt has been overcome by the passage of time or perhaps with the development of his new fame. Instead of the young inexperienced lawyer caught in the middle of a mess he didn't make, we are supposed to believe that Dean was actually the "Cool Hand Luke" of the White House, the man who was able to overcome all the shit that hit the fan.

"I kissed a lot of ass," he tells a jailmate who asked how he got to so high a position at so early an age, and the book leaves little doubt that he did. His tale is a description of the large assortment of "cheek to cheek" bussing Dean was willing to carry out for the sake of Nixon, and because of his own ambition to rise in power and -- as he confesses -- to get laid as much as he could.

The book is not the best of the Watergate books nor is it the worst. Dean has his problems as an author, else why would Simon and Schuster Publishers bring in political writer Taylor Branch at 20 G's to salvage the project after Dean's dull first draft was rejected.

The overriding problem with Blind Ambition, however, is, in final analysis, Dean's perspective on himself. While his description and insight into others of the Nixon White House is, at times, brilliant, his perspective into his own role is weak. Dean had a long time to reflect on his White House years, to answer for his own mind the why's and what happened's but too often his hindsight is little more than rationalization. Too much of the book is lost with Dean trying to convince the reader that he is not the "bottom dwelling slug" he has been accused of being. More time is lost with Dean emphasizing his own trumped-up importance in the conspiracy.

With hardback sales going well and the paperback onslaught still to come, Dean and company are probably in for a goodly sized slice of the American dream. It's commonly known among publishers that people will buy anything that is pumped up big enough for everyone to see. Quality, or truth in this situation, will have little to do with what sells. The name John Dean will sell this one and perhaps others.

Somewhere along the line each of the Watergate conspirators is probably going to profit from his wrongdoing. Blind Ambition may be worth reading, but buying it is something else again. Somehow I always feel that I'm in some way contributing to the grand conspiracy (not to be confused with Watergate) when buying this kind of pulp. That is a frightening thought when you get right down to it. It's a gross proposition.

the plant in November and made final arrangements.

But by the time I interviewed Robinson in November plans had changed considerably. Sangamo had requested, Robinson said, that they be allowed to hire private researchers to conduct the study of their employes; the results would then be made available to DHEC and NIOSH for review. Robinson said, "Originally, (DHEC and NIOSH) were going to do it, but then Sangamo with the blessing of -- with our blessing, tacitly, decided they would pay for the consultant and what not and let us look over their shoulder, and we went along with that." Robinson said the decision was made in part because of the large expense involved in conducting a thorough epidemiological survey. "We're not too sorry to see the company paying the way; Sangamo is going to pay the entire cost."

Would former employes and members of the general population still be included in the study, I asked? He said Sangamo "indicated that they want to do some people in town," but if the company decided not to include former employes and Pickens residents, then these two groups would not be included. "We have no money to do it," he said. During our interview, Robinson said a final decision regarding the study would be made the following Monday (Nov. 21) at a meeting between DHEC, NIOSH, Sangamo, and Sangamo's private consultants from Albany (NY) University.

On November 23, Sangamo spokesman Gray Geddie announced that a "thoroughly objective" study would be conducted on present Sangamo employes, beginning in Jan., 1977. A news account quoted Geddie as saying that "the study is an expansion of a project previously planned by the state DHEC," and added that "Robinson said the Sangamo plan is an improvement over the previous proposal. 'They're going to do a better program than we could have done,' Robinson said, 'and they're going to pay for it themselves. I think Sangamo's doing a favor to the state.' Robinson said cutbacks in state funds could have curtailed DHEC's efforts." No mention was made in the report of studies on former employes or Pickens residents. I called Robinson and asked if Sangamo still intended to do these. "No studies or examinations will be conducted on individuals outside the plant," he said. Sangamo had decided not to do them and DHEC couldn't afford to anymore.

Smith's account of the events between his September meeting with Robinson and Sangamo and the late November announcement of the private study is illuminating. "I thought everything had been settled in September and we were going ahead with the study," Smith told me. "We (NIOSH) began developing the protocol (plans for the survey) and made arrangements to go down in November. About two weeks before we were scheduled to go down, I received a letter stating that Sangamo would be doing the study on its own." He added that the letter expressed the hope that NIOSH would particpate in reviewing the results of the private study. "I was put off, I must admit," he said, "because we had invested time and effort in planning." Although Robinson told me that the Nov. 21 meeting to make final plans for the private study had included a NIOSH official, Smith said no one from NIOSH was there. He said although he was informed of the meeting, no attempt was made to arrange for a time when he could be there, and he was unable to attend. "I wrote a letter saying if DHEC wanted us for consultants, they had to let us in on their planning," he said. Smith said he never received a reply and he has heard nothing from DHEC "immediately prior to or since that meeting" on Nov. 21.

Although Sangamo spokesmen and Robinson have said that the study now planned is an expansion of the NIOSH study and "a better program", Smith said "it is not an expansion of anything we were going to do" because neither DHEC nor Sangamo has seen NIOSH's plan. "I don't want to contradict Dr. Robinson," he said, "but if you don't have something in hand, how can you compare?"

Smith added a federal study could have included examinations of former Sangamo employes and area residents. He said that while NIOSH did not have direct authority to do studies outside of industrial facilities, "contractual arrangements with sister agencies" have been worked out in the past and could have been worked out in this situation. "The state would have to pay for the manpower but we could provide the services," he said.

The cost of an in-plant study would have been borne largely by the federal agency, so Robinson's argument that cutbacks in state funds could have curtailed DHEC's efforts is questionable.

Although DHEC, with Robinson as its spokesman, has strongly implied in the last month that NIOSH was fully cooperating in the planned private study, Smith made it clear that NIOSH's involvement at present is negligible. What's going on? Why was the federal study aborted in mid-stream? Smith, with some sympathy in his voice, speculated that "they're (Sangamo's) running sacred. PCBs have been tried and found dangerous. They have no way of knowing whether the feds are going to be objective, although I certainly believe we would be. I'm sure that they want to have as much say, input, and control as they can. If we did it, they would have input, but not control." Smith added that from what he knew, the private consultants hired by Sangamo were capable scientists.

Certainly Sangamo, since they are paying for the study, will be in a position to keep the results private. If anything startling should turn up, we have to assume that Sangamo, with DHEC looking over its shoulder, will take some sort of action. But if no direct correlations are found between PCB levels in the blood of workers (no tissue studies will be done) and actual physical signs of liver or pancreatic or some other disease, we will return to the familiar question: what will the employes be told? And will the company continue to monitor employes for physical signs of PCB-related disease, or will this be the end of it?

Whatever the results of the Sangamo study, one thing's for sure -- former Sangamo employes and members of the general public who live in the vicinity of the plant will know nothing more than they know now about the possible chronic effects of their exposure to PCB within and outside of the plant. Recent water studies in the Pickens area indicate PCB levels in finished drinking water are much higher than the national average. DHEC air sampling around the plant has shown that the air is also contaminated with the substance, as is the sediment in the lake and nearby streams, not to mention the fish. This has been going on for 20 years, and no one knows what effects it has had on the general population. A preliminary study of health statistics from Pickens County conducted earlier this year by DHEC listed six possible explanations for a higher-than-average death rate in the county. Number five reads: "The higher incidence of deaths is due to occupational hazards of working with PCBs (or being associated with someone who works with PCBs);" and number six read: "The higher incidence is due to drinking water contaminated with PCBs." These are possible explanations -- suggestions and not conclusions. But don't they justify some sort of study among the Pickens general population, even if the state has to foot the bill? I can already hear the matter-of-fact voice which says, "Well, suppose we find out that the PCB-contaminated environment is having chronic effects on community health. What can we do about it? The stuff's already there; you can't make it go away." Disturbingly true. But you can, as one health expert told me recently,"Drink bottled water and breathe filtered air, or even pack up and leave. It's up to the individual, not the state, to decide whether he wants to continue to live or work in a contaminated environment."

events & entertainment

CINEMA

ATLANTIC THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"Call Me and Sin" followed by "Cherry Blossom." These are rated X. From 11 a.m.

ATLANTIC II THEATRE, 3220 Two Notch Road, 786-0790

"Deep Jaws," not a fish flick, precedes the return of "Misty Beethoven." From 11.

CAROLINA THEATRE, 1323 Main Street, 252-8011

Another week for "Car Wash," a mostly black musical starring Richard Pryor, Professor Irwin Corey, and George Carlin. 1, 3, 5, 7, and 9 with only the last three shows during the week.

COLUMBIA EAST I THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Born Losers." In which Tom Laughlin first appeared on the movie scene as the Billy Jack character, a macho guy who expresses moral outrage by cracking heads. PG. 5, 7, and 9 with some more 1 and 3 shows on the weekend.

COLUMBIA EAST II THEATRE, 7369 Garner's Ferry Road, 776-0350

"Dr. Zhivago." When director David Lean turns on the juice he does it in a big way, but this weeper about the Russian revolution, while conveying the big novel scope, is something of a plodder and indifferently acted by Omar Sharif, Julie Christie, Geraldine Chaplin, and Rod Steiger. The film needs some laughs. G. 1:30, on the weekend and 4:30 and 8:30 throughout the week.

DUTCH SQUARE NORTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"Two Minute Warning," stays. 2, 4:30, 7, and 9:30.

DUTCH SQUARE SOUTH THEATRE, Dutch Square Mall, 798-1110

"The Shaggy Detective." The latest effort in the long series of Disney "Shaggy" movies -- this one starring Dean Jones and Tim Conway. 5, 7, and 9 with 1 and 3 on the weekend and 11 on Saturday.

FOX THEATRE, 1607 Main Street, 254-5212

"One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest." Four Oscars for this excellent film. Jack Nicholson, Louise Fletcher. R. 4:20, 6:40, 9 with a 2 p.m. on the weekend.

GAMECOCK I THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Dr. No" in a double feature with "From Russia With Love." Talk about dredging the sixties for "product"; these Bond pictures have been around upteen times besides TV play. Go, if you're desperate, at 7 and 3 for "Russia" (only 7 during the week), 5:05 and 9:15 for "No" with an additional 1 p.m. show on the weekend.

GAMECOCK II THEATRE, Parkland Plaza Shopping Center, 796-0022

"Pat Garrett and Billy the Kid." Sam Peckinpah brought Bob Dyland, Kris Kristofferson, and a bit of his ultraviolence to the story of the two pals who ended up shooting it out, but the film was botched by studio tampering and Peckinpah's own narrow obsessions. R. 5:30, 7:30, and 9:30; 1:30 and 3:30 as well on the weekend.

MIRACLE THEATRE, 1229 Main Street, 256-1950

"Marathon Man" finishes out it's stay here followed by Peter Bogdanovich's "Nickelodeon" on Tuesday, the 21st (that day there will be 7:15 and 9:45 benefit shows only with admission set at 5¢). PG for "Nickelodeon" and the regular times will be 2:15, 4:45, 7:15, and 9:45.

JEFFERSON SQUARE THEATRE, Jefferson Square Downtown, 254-6731

"Carrie." Brian DePalma's new horror fantasy is a luscious pop fairy tale about an off-beat Cinderella (Sissy Spacek) who uses her psychokinetic powers to destroy the Senior Prom. Sounds strange, but DePalma's gothic high style makes for an extraordinarily enjoyable movie. With Piper Laurie, John Travolta. R. 2:30, 4:45, 7 and 9:20 with the 2:30 show dropping during the week.

PALMETTO THEATRE, 1417 Main Street, 254-5800

"King Kong." The new Dino De Laurentiis version should be spectacular is nothing else with shows at 2, 4:30, 7, and 9:30. Jeff Bridges, Charles Grodin, Jessica Lange.

PLAZA III THEATRE, 1223 Main Street, 254-7960

"Tender Flesh" sounds like a fun movie: it's about cannibalism. Rated R. 1:40, 3:30, 5:20, 7:10, and 9. The late show on the weekend of the 17th and 18th will be "The Rocky Horror Picture Show" at 11 p.m.

RICHLAND MALL I THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"The Pink Panther Strikes Again." If it's as funny as its predecessors, should be a good bet for Christmas distraction. Peter Sellers. PG. 3:30, 5:30, 7:30, and 9:30.

RICHLAND MALL II THEATRE, Richland Mall, 782-2228

"George." Some kind of dog story with Marshall Thompson. G. 3, 5, 7, and 9. The late show here on the 17th and 18th will be "The Concert For Bangladesh."

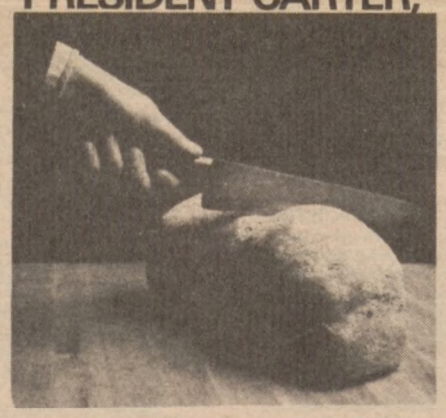
PRESIDENT CARTER,



IS A 'HALF A LOAF' THE WAY TO BEGIN?

During the campaign, Jimmy Carter promised to pardon those who resisted Vietnam by refusing to be drafted. But he says nothing about the 780,000 military resisters who received less-than-honorable discharges during the Vietnam era.

WRITE President-elect Carter (Box 1976, Atlanta, GA) and give him your views.
